Let Digital Glory Die

Escaping the Online Inner Ring

Article by Samuel James

Few of us would willingly repeat our middle and high school years. For many, the span from age twelve to seventeen held insecurities, fears, disappointments, and maybe even intense suffering that we would not want to relive.

Part of our trouble came from the adolescent tendency to filter everything, even our deepest joys and triumphs, through peers. If you're like me, you can instantly recall moments when people you thought were friends turned on you or when nothing you did seemed enough for those whose affection and friendship you desired most. In those years, the pressure of vying for the approval of others could burden even our happiest moments.

Several years ago, I read a pundit who pointed out that social media is a lot like high school. I think he's right. As much as we might reassure ourselves that we aren't the same clique-ambitious, relationally anxious people we were in our teens, isn't it often true that we feel similar emotions and make decisions for similar reasons online?

C.S. Lewis famously observed that “the passion for the Inner Ring is most skillful in making a man who is not yet a very bad man do very bad things” (The Weight of Glory, 154). Lewis had a more traditional idea of an “inner ring” in mind: groups of embodied persons, enticing and excluding others in schools and offices and communities. But what if the inner rings that sway our loyalties are digital?

I submit that one of the biggest challenges to Christian faithfulness today is the way our technology has empowered us to create a near infinite network of inner rings.

三十周年 30TH 感恩庆典 ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION

惟喜爱耶和华的律法，昼夜思想，这人便为有福。
他要像一棵树栽在溪水旁，按时候结果子，
叶子也不枯干。凡他所作的尽都顺利。

But his delight is in the law of the LORD,
and on HIS law he meditates day and night.
He is like a tree planted by streams of water, which yields its fruit in season and whose leaf does not wither. Whatever he does prospers.
